

The Insurrection in Cuba

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.

The Herald's Washington special dispatch says:

The impression exists here among most of the members of the Government that the Cuban revolution may be called a success.

By the last steamer from Havana there arrived several very able and wealthy leading men of the revolutionary Junta, who have already made their representations to the State Department upon the condition of the Island. They affirm that there are now 12,000 to 15,000 troops in the insurgent force, well armed and organized, and that any number can be obtained so soon as arms sufficient are landed upon the Island.

One strong point which they make is that they require no men from the United States. "We have men enough, all we want is arms and munitions of war." In consequence they deprecate any filibustering enterprise.

Large numbers of the most prominent and wealthy young men of Havana are constantly going to Eastern Cuba to cast their fortunes with the Liberators.
