The Cuban Expedition.

The Isle of Cuba is included in the Monroe Doctrine, and the United States, having a large trade with that island, are interested in maintaining the freedom of commerce with it. The Cuban people, therefore, have a right to expect the protection of the United States, and the American people have a right to expect that the government will stand by them.

The United States Government has long been averse to any interference with the internal concerns of Cuba, but it has always been ready to extend its protection to the people of that island in the event of invasion or the like. The United States has always been ready to cooperate with other nations in the maintenance of peace in the Western Hemisphere.

The United States Government has always been ready to extend its protection to the people of Cuba in the event of invasion or the like, and it is now prepared to do so in the event of a war with Spain.

The United States Government has always been ready to cooperate with other nations in the maintenance of peace in the Western Hemisphere, and it is now prepared to do so in the event of a war with Spain.