WASHINGTON, June 5, 1870.

Since writing the above letter I have learned that General Banks, in deference to the advice of numerous friends and in compliance with several letters from different parts of the country, has concluded to call up the Cuban question next Monday, instead of a week from that day, as previously supposed. This is the result of the publication of his report in the HERALD, that publication having roused such a powerful sympathy in favor of Cuba as to react on Banks himself. There seems to be no doubt that General Banks will obtain unanimous consent or be able to suspend the rules in order to have his report and resolutions
