

THE WAR IN CUBA.—By special telegram to the HERALD from Havana we learn that the Spanish troops are after the rebel guerillas with energy. Several columns have been engaged, in which the rebels were defeated. These conflicts all tell. The Spaniards are evidently driving their opponents into a corner from which they cannot escape and where they must sooner or later be captured. Foolish and misguided men to prolong a conflict in which they have not the slightest hope of success! Their true policy for some time past has been to surrender on the best terms they could obtain; but, unfortunately, they have been urged on by those who do not want to fight, and who say that they do the cause more good by remaining away from Cuba.
