GRANT PARISH.

The Massacre a Most Terrible One—Escape of the Whites—Difficulty in Sending off Troops.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, April 17.—Later news from the scene of hostilities in Grant Parish show that the massacre of the negroes at Colfax Court-house was even more horrible in all its details and more complete in its execution than was at first reported. It now appears that not a single colored man was killed until all of them had surrendered to the whites who were fighting with them, when over 100 of the unfortunate negroes were brutally shot down in cold blood.

It is understood that another lot of negroes was burned to death in the Court-house when it was set on fire.

The details of the massacre, as they are related by eye-witnesses to the terrible scenes enacted at Colfax Court-house, are positively appalling in their atrocity, and would appear to be more like the work of fiends than that of civilized men in a Christian country.

After the butchery of the surrendered negroes the whites scattered in every direction, few of them going to their homes. It is understood that many of them left for the Texas border, in hopes of escaping the consequences of their crime. As yet no arrests have been made.

Grant Parish is over 200 miles above the mouth of the Red River, and as there are very few boats leaving this city, the State authorities have experienced the utmost difficulty in getting suitable transportation to that region for the militia that has been ordered out to proceed thither.

The Federal troops, although ready to march to-day, could not procure any transportation whatever, consequently they cannot proceed to their destination, which is very unfortunate for the best interests of the State.

Gov. Kellogg succeeded after a great deal of exertion in getting sufficient transportation on Thursday last to enable him to send off a small number of the State militia, who got under way last Friday. Owing to the delay in their departure, they did not arrive at the scene of the hostilities until Monday, the day after the massacre.

These troops buried over sixty bodies of colored men that had been found by them near the scene of the slaughter. That seems to have been the whole scope of their operations, as all the whites participating in the battle had escaped before they arrived.

Cols. Wright and De Uline, of the Louisiana State militia, arrived in this city this evening, bringing with them a full report of the horrible affair. Owing to the lateness of the hour I am unable to give you more than this brief outline.
