* General LYON had sent frequent and urgent requests for reinforcements, the Rebels under McCulloch and Price being quadruple his army, but finding it impossible to procure them, he determined, rather than abandon S. W. Missouri, to give battle to the enemy, which he met at Wilson's Creek, near Springfield, Mo. A regiment, whose Colonel had been killed, asked for a commander. Though twice wounded, LYON replied: "I will lead you; come on, brave men," and, while gallantly charging at their head, was struck in the breast by a Minie ball, and almost instantly expired. He was interred, with great honors, in Connecticut—his native State. After his death, Congress resolved: "That it deems it just and proper to enter upon its records a recognition of the eminent and patriotic services of the late Brig.-General NATHANIEL LYON. The country to whose services he devoted his life will guard and preserve his fame as a part of its own glory."

* Governor Curtin, Sep. 26, 1862, tendered to General REYNOLDS his thanks, in behalf of the State of Pennsylvania, in the following terms:

"GENERAL: Having relieved you from duty as Commander of the Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, recently called for the defense of the State, I deem it proper to express my strong sense of the gratitude which Pennsylvania owes for the zeal, spirit and ability which you brought to her service at a period when her honor and safety were threatened. That for her security you left the command of your brave division, the Pennsylvania Reserves, thus losing the opportunity of leading this gallant corps at South Mountain and the Antietam, is a just demonstration of the true affection you bear for your native State, which, be assured, her freemen reciprocate, and for which, in their behalf, I am happy to make you this acknowledgment."

† General REYNOLDS "was struck with a rifle-shot that caused almost instant death—a grievous loss to the Army of the Potomac, one of whose most distinguished and best beloved officers he was; one whom, by the steady growth of the highest military qualities, the general voice of the whole Army had marked out for the largest fame."

* Major-General Meade, in his official order announcing his death, says: "The public services of the deceased, in connection with the Army of the Potomac, from its organization to within a few months of its muster out, at the close of the War, are too well known to require recital. There was hardly an engagement in which he did not take part; there is not a portion of its records or written history that does not bear witness to his ability and fidelity; and to its officers and soldiers he was especially endeared by a never failing patience and kindliness of heart, that made no labor irksome that could promote their interests and welfare. The General Commanding feels that this official notice is due, not only to the public career, but to the private virtues of this distinguished soldier, and that in him the country has lost a faithful servant, and the army a valuable associate and friend."

* General Grant in recommending him for this promotion, says: "He has been with me in every battle since the commencement of the Rebellion, except Belmont. At Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh, and the Siege of Corinth, as a Staff Officer and Engineer, his services were conspicuous and highly meritorious. At the second battle of Corinth, his skill as a soldier was displayed in successfully carrying reinforcements to the besieged garrison, when the enemy was between him and the point to be reached. In the advance through Central Mississippi, General MCPHERSON commanded one wing of the army with all the ability possible to show, he having the lead in the advance, and the rear retiring.

"In the campaign and siege terminating with the fall of Vicksburg, General MCPHERSON has filled a conspicuous part. At the Battle of Port Gibson, it was under his direction that the enemy was driven, late in the afternoon, from a position they had succeeded in holding all day against an obstinate attack. His Corps, the advance always under his immediate eye, were the pioneers in the movement from Port Gibson to Hawkinson's Ferry. From the north fork of the Bayou Pierre to Black River it was a constant skirmish, the whole skilfully managed. The enemy was so closely pressed as to be unable to destroy their bridge of boats after them. From Hawkinson's Ferry to Jackson, the Seventeenth Army Corps marched on roads not travelled by other troops, fighting the entire Battle of Raymond alone, and the bulk of Johnston's Army was fought by this Corps, entirely under the management of General MCPHERSON. At Champion Hill, the Seventeenth Corps and General MCPHERSON were conspicuous. All that could be termed a battle there, was fought by the divisions of General MCPHERSON'S Corps and General HOVEY'S Division of the Thirteenth Corps. In the Assault of the 22d of May on the fortifications of Vicksburg, and during the entire siege, General MCPHERSON and his command took unfading laurels. He is one of the ablest engineers, and most skilful generals. I would respectfully, but urgently, recommend his promotion to the position of Brigadier-General in the Regular Army."

Awarded, Oct. 1863, a medal of honor, by the officers of his Corps, for the gallant manner in which he had led them during the Campaign and Siege of Vicksburg.

† Soon after his death, General Grant addressed the following letter to the aged grandmother of General MCPHERSON:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
CITY POINT, VA., Aug. 10, 1864.

MY DEAR MADAM: Your very welcome letter of the 3d instant has reached me. I am glad to know the relatives of the lamented Major-General MCPHERSON are aware of the more than friendship existing between him and myself. A nation grieves at the loss of one so dear to our nation's cause. It is a selfish grief, because the nation had more to expect from him than from almost any one living. I join in this selfish grief, and add the grief of personal love for the departed. He formed for some time one of my military family. I knew him well. To know him was but to love him. It may be some consolation to you, his aged grandmother, to know

* Captain PUTNAM was killed by a shot in the head, on the parapet of Ft. Wagner, which he was one of the first of the Stormers to reach in leading his Regiment to the Assault. He fell while fearlessly cheering on his troops amid the hottest fire, to hold possession of the work so heroically gained, his last words being "Hold on for a minute, my brave men, our reinforcements are coming."
