

WALKER'S BATTLE AT VIRGIN BAY—ACCOUNT FROM AN EYE WITNESS.—A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, at San Juan del Norte, writes as follows:

“On the morning of the 3d September, about 8 o'clock, news of Walker's approach was received at Virgin Bay, and soon after the democratic army entered the town. First came the 'Falango Americans,' composed of sixty-five Californians, armed with rifles and revolvers. After these followed the native legion, one hundred and twenty-five men, armed with muskets and bayonets. Among the officers of the former were Col. Walker, Capt. Doubleday, (acting commissary,) C. C. Hornsby, late attaché to Wheeler's legation, and Dr. Jones, surgeon. The native troops were commanded by Gen. Chillon, assisted by Gen. Mendez, Col. Luzarago, and Captains Cortago and Chillon, the latter a son of the General.

“About 11 o'clock, a. m., the cry of 'El Enemigo! El Enemigo!' announced the arrival of Gen. Guardiola, with five hundred men, in three divisions, the first by the Transit road, led by Guardiola; the other two diverging to the right and left, with a view of surrounding the town.

“The advance of Guardiola was fired upon by a picket guard of twelve men from Walker's native legion. The action soon became general. A confused hubbub of voices was heard on all sides. At one moment, 'Viva El Gobierno!' then 'Viva Castellon!' then 'Hurrah for Walker!' At last, the government forces were completely defeated, with a loss of from sixty to one hundred. Thirty-four of their bodies were buried by order of Judge Cushing. Of the democratic forces five were wounded and not one was killed. Col. Walker was slightly wounded in the neck by a musket ball, and Capt. Doubleday in the side. The entire battle lasted but an hour and a half.”
