

LECOMBTON, October 14.

Colonel Titus, the famous leader of the pro-slavery party, (and he is one of their bravest officers,) has received a letter from General Quitman, of Mississippi, inviting him to leave Kansas and take command of an expedition for Central America, and that two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been, or will be provided for the object contemplated—the conquest of Central America, and more slave territory. The Colonel expresses himself disgusted with Kansas, and is very desirous of leaving for a more congenial climate and associations than are found here. The South is looking towards Central America with more interest than towards this state, in hopes of making slave territory in that vicinity with more ease and with less excitement than the conquest of Kansas is likely to cost them.

Col. Titus is an intimate and personal friend of 'President William Walker,' and sent him from Florida the first company of soldiers he received. This company numbered about thirty men. The Colonel has the reputation in the South of being the most efficient military filibuster that can be found anywhere, and just at this time his valuable services are required, and he is sent for.

Col. Titus has not yet recovered from the wounds received at the time he was taken prisoner in Sept. last, by Gen. Lane. He carries about an ounce of "free soil lead" in his body, at this time and has but par-lially recovered the use of his hands and arms. He walks about, however, taking charge and looking out for his companions, who have the charge of the prisoners.

His men, numbering over three hundred, are young men from the South, who have enrolled themselves as Governor Geary's militia. They are fearful of not being able to return home this fall. At the time when their present enlistment expires, the rivers will be frozen up, stopping all egress from the territory. These men make no secret of their desire and determination to return home as soon as possible.
