

THE diabolism that FRANK PIERCE has let loose upon the people of Kansas, is of an atrocity that we confess our inability to fathom.—Every successive day's tidings assumes a deeper blackness, until now hell itself may be challenged to match the doings in Kansas. The following letter, giving the statement of a returned Kansas emigrant, we find in the Boston Telegraph :

Violence to Women in Kansas!

To the Editor of the Boston Telegraph :

SIR—A meeting was held in this place last evening to hear a statement from a gentleman just arrived from Kansas. He was in Lawrence during the time of the sacking, and for four days afterwards. He confirms fully the horrible outrages—which have already been published. His boarding house, among the rest, was pillaged, and his trunks broken open and robbed.

But one fact he states that out-Herods Herod, and heaps infamy upon infamy on the heads of those white savages. He says he knows it to be a fact, that a party of them went to a claim about four miles from Lawrence, upon which there was only a matronly woman and her two daughters; that they violently abused the mother in her own house, and took her daughters to their tent and kept them during the invasion!

I hope that the whole North will unite as one man in a War of Extermination upon the barbarous hordes and the dens from which they come forth to commit their depredations. The gentleman says he went out, believing that the newspaper accounts of suffering in Kansas were gotten up for political effect; but he says the half has not and cannot be told.

The meeting unanimously resolved "That we adopt all of reprobation, and indignation, that has been uttered in New England, with reference to the Sumner and Kansas outrages, as the sentiment of this community." P.

And, in view of such facts, the political party, whose action has brought all this infamy into being, are brazen enough to ask the American people for another four years of power! Palsied be the hand that would lift a ballot for the defence of such outrages!
