

PRESS MOBBED IN KANSAS.

The St. Louis papers of the 31 instant furnish some particulars of the recent destruction of a newspaper establishment at Leavenworth, in Kansas, of which we have had a telegraphic account.

The St. Louis Intelligencer says: "The office of the Territorial Register, at Leavenworth city, has been mobbed, and the press and type thrown into the Missouri river. We do not know the offence of the Register. It was ably edited, and claimed to be an Administration Democratic or Douglas paper, though it inclined to making Kansas a free State. Its founders, we believe, were Southern men, Tennesseans."

The St. Louis Democrat says: "Saturday, the 22d, the office of the Territorial Register, at Leavenworth city, was entered by a mob and the press and types taken out, conveyed to the river, and thrown beneath the water. Mr. Dellahay, the editor, was absent at the time, and there was no resistance offered to the progress of the rioters. After having drowned the press they returned to the office and burnt a lot of the paper which had been supplied for the printing of the Register. They then dispersed, and numbers were shortly afterwards engaged in fighting and rowdying around the Empire House and other of the principal drinking saloons of Leavenworth. The whole affair was of a most unlawful and disgraceful character. It is stated that the mob was composed principally of Missourians. The sole cause of the riotous proceeding was that Mr. Dellahay had made himself obnoxious by taking a bold stand and denouncing the interference of Missourians in the affairs of Kansas."
