

Block Houses.—We have been amused in reading the Black Republican correspondence from Kansas. They call every house they attack or burn a "block house." Thus the Post Office at Franklia was a 'block house,' as was also the home of Col. Titus. Now the fact is, they were both common log houses, or in truth cabins, the largest stick not being six inches in diameter. We saw a man who was in Lawrence the day after the attack on Col. Titus, who heard them boast of a gunner they had in their camp, who on the first fire knocked the ridge pole higher than a kite, and gave the old cabin particular h—li! We assert that the only block house that is now or ever has been in the Territory, is one built by Lane's men on the hill overlooking Lawrence, and that has been erected within the last three weeks. Put down all the block house stories as fabulous—just read log cabins and you have the truth.—[Kansas City Enterprise.
