

KANSAS.—George W. Clarke left on Tuesday last for Kansas. On Monday he delivered a speech at the Methodist Church to the largest audience, perhaps, ever assembled within its walls. He dwelt with eloquence on the soil, water, and timber of the new territory, and gave a graphic and exciting account of the struggles of the pro-slavery citizens at the late election which gave victory to the South. Had the General remained a longer time in our section, he doubtless would have created a Kansas funeral equalling that of Van Buren previous to his departure. He was listened to with marked attention, and was constantly interrupted by bursts of applause. His family accompanies him to his new home. Fayetteville Independent.

The General and his family arrived here last week all in good health; and are now most comfortably ensconced at the farm mansion of J. B. Wornall, Esq., two miles from town. Every one will please notice that Gen. Clark, during his absence has been faithful to the pro-slavery interests of Kansas, having in Arkansas labored with his might to achieve a strong co-operation with our own citizens and the "Arkansas travellers" to make Kansas what it must and shall be, a slave State. Now that the General is on the battle-ground once more, we shall wait patiently to hear his newly arranged quickstep that he has prepared for Governor Reeder to march after while making his "charges."—Westport News.
