In identifying the foregoing individuals, it will be sufficient to determine their full names, dates and places of birth, citizenship, occupations and descriptions. Extensive inquiry to obtain this information is not desired in view of their presence in Cuba. The pertinent additional information desired should be limited to a check of your office indices, sources and informants. The Bureau desires this data so that consideration can be given to interviewing them concerning their activities in Cuba upon their return to the U.S. It is also desired so that the Bureau can furnish such information to the interested agencies so that these agencies can take appropriate action. For example, State Department may desire to expatriate those Americans who have served in the Cuban armed forces, and it is possible that State Department will take such action based on information furnished by us. (S)(u)

NOTE: The subject is an American soldier-of-fortune who has lost his U.S. citizenship because of his pro-Castrop activities. (u)
