

Colonel Titus' Nicaraguan Emigrants in New-Orleans.

From the Crescent, Dec. 31.

Colonel Titus, with 120 emigrants, wishing to proceed to Nicaragua, arrived in this city yesterday. Some 20, also, arrived from Texas. Quite a large number of others, it is understood, are anxious to cast their fortunes in that country, but lack the means of conveyance thither as speedily as is desirable, not being willing to wait for the return steamer, which sails on the 27th of next month. They wish to go immediately, and are not prepared to wait, doing nothing for almost thirty days.

There is no possibility of these men proceeding to Nicaragua except by the next steamer, unless a sailing vessel is provided for them. We think one should be so provided in two or three days, and rely upon the liberality of our citizens to effect that object. We appeal to them to act promptly and liberally in the premises; we call upon them to open their purse-strings and contribute; we ask them to remember that their friends and countrymen in Nicaragua are threatened by a foe that proclaims extermination to all, in advance, without regard to age, sex or condition, combatant or non-combatant, and act accordingly. But a small sum is required, and it ought to be made up with the smallest possible delay.

We understand a contribution will be asked for to-day or to-morrow, let not the appeal be made in vain.
