

THE CUBAN REVOLUTION.

Parties in New York, who are in direct communication with the revolutionists in Cuba, write to this city that the insurgents are making steady progress. They are relying upon the yellow fever to check the operations of the forces sent from Spain, as they expect the fever will appear before these troops can make any particular headway. Leading Cubans write that the movement now is for a separate nationality instead of annexation, and that the abolition of slavery is included in the plan.
