

Sympathy for the Cubans was the indirect cause of Secretary Rawlins's death. At the last Cabinet meeting he attended, he made a very long, very able and very forcible speech in favor of recognition, concluding when much exhausted, the effort being altogether too much for his delicate condition. It irritated and inflamed his lungs to such a degree that it materially increased the hemorrhage which followed, and ended his life.