

THE CUBAN SUGAR QUESTION.—The sugar planters of Cuba have been getting their anger aroused by the supposition that an additional duty of two cents per pound will be charged by the Collector of the Port of this city on certain kinds of sugar imported here. The Spaniards don't like this, and by way of retaliation they propose to urge upon the Captain General the policy of not allowing any more American machinery to enter the island. Good. Suppose, then, his Excellency should commence by rejecting the thirty new gunboats built in New York.
