Insurgents Massing in the Eastern Department—Reticence of the Havana Journals—The Jesuits Praised.

HAVANA, March 23, 1869.

Advices from Santiago de Cuba to the 15th inst. represent that the insurgents are massing their forces on the south side of the island. The inhabitants in that quarter demand more troops for their protection.

The Havana journals are all silent in regard to the movements of the government troops and of the insurgent forces. Nothing has been made known for some days of the operations of Count Valmaseda and Colonel Lono, or of the rebel generals Quesada and Marmol.

The Diario of to-day, in a leading article, praises the Jesuits and deeply regrets that the society was not established in the island twenty years ago.

All the journals, except the Foz, are reticent as usual in their accounts of and comments upon the late exciting occurrences.

Spanish War Vessels Seize an American Brig in British Waters—The Matter Represented to General Dulce—Accident to a Peruvian Monitor.

SEA

HAVANA, March 23, 1869.

The gunboat Cherub, from Nassau, brings a communication to the British Consul at this place from the Governor of the Bahamas, announcing that the American brig Mary Lowell, Captain Nickerson, of Eastport, Me., was captured by the Spanish war vessel Andalusia while in charge of British Custom House officers, who had taken possession of her on a charge of carrying arms and supplies to the Cuban insurgents. She was within three-quarters of a mile from the inner harbor of Ragged Island, which she was about entering with a pilot on board. Captain Nickerson has gone to New York. Because the vessel had been blockaded she is claimed as a prize, and is expected at Havana. The Consul has represented the matter to Captain General Dulce.

One of the Peruvian monitors, while on her way, parted the hawser connecting her with the steamer towing, and in endeavoring to recover the connection a collision took place, and the steamer was sunk. Seven lives were lost. The monitor was laying at Ragged Island. The whereabouts of the other is unknown.
