NASSAU. The Governor of the Bahamas Refuses to Surreader the Commadizatio's Capters-Caban Fillbusters-Rumored Salling of an Expedition. HAVANA, April 17.—Evening. The Spanish war steamer Fizarro arrived at this port last evening from Nassan. She brought three of the crew of the Commodization, who presented themselves voluntarily to the commander of that vessel, stating that hey had been forcibly carried warm by the pirates, and that even in Massat they had been confined for several days. The Pizarro brings news that the leaders of the party engaged in the capture had already sailed from Massaxi in the direction of New York. Some of them still remain in that city, but the Governor of the Rahamas refuses to deliver them up, stating that the could take most one action in the matter until the heard from the English government, before whom he had laid the whole Market of the South of the Country of the Countr upon their houses and publishing in the periodicals the most gross falsehoods. There are offered for sale thirty boxes of arms, but the owners are not content with bills or promises, and the flibusters have not been able to collect the necessary money for their purchase. The masters of vessels also decting carrying contraband goods to the coast, as they fear capture from the great number of Spanish cruisers. It was said at the last hour that the filibusters had two small schooners in the south part of Nassau. which were about sailing, each having from thirty to forty men. They expected to meet a small steamer, on which their passengers would be reshipped in order to take them to Key Romano." The same journal, speaking of Nassau, says:- 'The situation of Nassau is excellent for a favorable re-eception among the people of the fillustering class, provided it pars well, but at present money is graing scarce. The civil war of the United States made Nassau very prosperous, and its population are hoping for equal advantages from the war in Cha."
