Particulars of General Jordan's Landing—The Expedition March to the Interior Without Trouble.

The landing of General Jordan with his 300 men in the Bay of Nipe was made on the 11th instant, near the sugar plantation of a Spaniard by the name of Pla. The commander sent out a party to secure transportation for the war material, and, on coming in sight of the houses of the plantation, they encountered about fifty Spanish soldiers, who had been stationed as a guard to protect the sugar crop of Señor Pla. The encounter was a mutual surprise; a few shots were exchanged, and the troops fled and were seen no more.

The party then took the carts, horses, mules and whatever they found suited to their needs, and with these loaded with their surplus arms and munitions took up their march for the interior. Their design was to join the forces of Julio Paratta, Marciano and other patriot leaders operating in the vicinity of Holguin. They took with them as prisoner a brother of Señor Pla, who was superintending the labors of the sugar plantation. This gentleman is well known in Havana, where for a long time he was engaged in the slave trade with Zulueta, Perez Calvo, Valdivieso, Durañon and others.
