

March in Search of Insurgents—Arrival of Prisoners—Wreck of an American Brig.

— SANTIAGO DE CUBA, April 21, 1892.

On Thursday, the 15th inst., General La Torre left here at the head of 1,500 men, with the intention of attacking the insurgents in Ramon, where they had a fortified camp. The expedition arrived safely at its destination and found the insurgent position deserted. Some munitions of war and rifles were captured and the entrenchments were destroyed. On the 22d the force was again here. The command, during La Torre's absence, devolved on the colonel of the battalion of Leon, now here, who was, however, relieved by Colonel Cansara, who arrived from Mayari on the 16th per steamer Thomas Brooks. This steamer brought several other officers, thirty-seven prisoners and three cannon, which latter had been used by the insurgents, though from their appearance and corroded state they could not have been of much service.

Her Majesty's steamship Doris, Captain Glyn, twenty-five guns, arrived on the 20th, and saluted the Spanish flag. She reports the wreck at Magna of the American brig Germania, with arms; cargo mostly lost. Off Cape Maiz the Doris saw a large steamer, apparently American.

Delfin Aguilera was shot this morning. As the trials of offenders are not made public I cannot say why he was shot. He was no relation to Francisco Aguilera.
