

CUBA arose in revolt against the Spanish rulers. Our government, being neutral, stood still, not favoring the new movement, as not knowing to which side the people really inclined, since the opposition had a party and the government had a party. But now the very government party has seconded the revolution by another revolt against the Spanish rulers, and has driven them out. Is it any longer doubtful what our government should do?