

Cuba.

The volunteers have disagreed among themselves and have so far failed to organize their proposed colonial government. A court of inquiry into Dulce's conduct has been instituted by the volunteers. They are jubilant over the countermanding of Dulce's order for more troops, as they had an idea the troops were intended for their own subjugation. Affrays between them and the regulars are occurring in the interior. Quesada is closely pressing the siege of Puerto Principe.