

A GERM POWER IN CUBA.—Cholera and vomito have appeared in Cuba in the dread form of allied independent forces, ravaging the ranks of both contestants in the field, the Spaniards, being unacclimatized, suffering more severely. The mortality is represented as "frightful," sixteen per cent of the men in arms on both sides being swept away at a monthly ratio. The volunteers do not, however, despair of the cause, and Spain threatens reinforcements when the weather becomes more favorable. It is war and pestilence. Will famine follow? A question for our humanitarians.
