
BLIND GUIDES.—Prim's thought was that Spain had better let Cuba go, because her going would be at most "a question of time." Having exchanged views with Napoleon he now thinks differently. Does he believe that Napoleon's judgment, with Mexico in the record, is a safe one to steer by in American affairs?