

SICKLES' despatch to the Spanish government in regard to Cuba was apparently the means of giving the Spanish people the first intimation they have had of the real state of affairs in that island. They had taken very rose-colored views on the subject from government bulletins, and suddenly they learned that Cuba had so nearly slipped away that the United States was talking about recognizing her as a belligerent power.