

A MASS MEETING FOR CUBA.—The Cubans and Cuban sympathizers in this city are going to have a mass meeting in Madison square. Why not? All public causes, whether they be of home or foreign origin—the expression of a political sentiment or the struggle of a neighbor nation—find a voice in such an appeal to the people as only a mass meeting can supply. Surely the open ventilation of the Cuban question is timely just now, and we are glad that it has been suggested. It is well that the people, as well as the press, should express their views upon this subject, even if it had no other effect than to strengthen the backbone of the administration. No day has yet been fixed for the meeting. But when it comes off it is said, that Ben Butler and Beecher will both be among the orators. Such a conjunction will be delicious. It will be good for Cuba and entertaining for everybody.
