

---

Notwithstanding the large reinforcements for the Spanish army in Cuba, the Captain-General has been compelled to withdraw the regular troops from the strongest fortress in Havana, and to supply their place by volunteers, in order to strengthen the Spanish force at Cienfuegos, which is seriously threatened by the insurgents. Facts like this prove that the revolution in Cuba is still alive and unsubdued.

---