As predicted three months ago, Caballero de Rodas will be the new Captain-General of Cuba. Gen. Dulce vacates his post equally on account of his own desperate health and the extreme jeopardy of the Spanish cause. He makes room for one notorious as the butcher of the Republicans in Spain, and whose appointment would signify that the conduct of the war in Cuba is about to assume a more relentless character than ever—save as qualified by the indubitable success of the Cubans. For this, humanity and democracy have now greater reason to pray. Compensatory intelligence, however, reaches us from Peru. We are specially advised that the Congress of that country have declared the recognition of the Cubans as belligerents, and it is probable that Mexico and others of the Spanish American republics will follow. Evidently the cause of Free Cuba reports progress.
