

Captain General Dulce has been very promptly reminded of the neighborhood of the United States to Cuba by the representations of our Consul General at Havana on the occasion of Mr. Colner's death. The Consul seems to have ridden a rather high horse in intimating that this country would protect its citizens in Cuba if the government did not. No one has any idea that Mr. Colner's death proceeded from any other cause than the disturbance in the island, or that it would have occurred if General Dulce could have prevented it. And yet the murder did occur, and this very Captain General, who now smooths over the circumstance with the affable words to our irate Consul, only a few years ago dealt in great swelling threats against all Americans.
