tion received by mail from the island of Cuba. The Captain General is out again in another faming proclamation, which, beyond its being more wordy than others which preceded it, presents no feature of difference. De Rodas' reception at Nuovitas was by no means as warm as was anticipated, and the fact of his being accompanied by Napoleon Arango, the Guban deserter, tended to increase the evident coolness of the Spanish sympathizers towards him. Confagrations are on the increase. The work of destruction still goes on, and the inactivity of the Gubans in the field is made up by their energy in the destruction of the property of their opponents. Though little is apparently done by the insurgents we cannot lose sight of the fact that Spain is gradually becoming weaker and weaker at home. Up to this time the Prim-Serrano government has been able to forward troops to suppress the revolution in Guba, but each day adds to the difficulties of the situation at home. The Gubans fully understand this. In their present situation, and under existing circumstances, it is the best thing for them. Spain weakened at home is a help to the Cubans abroad, and there is little reason to doubt that opportunities which the state of affairs presents will be taken advantage of by the struggling patriots.
