'Highest Priority' Given by U.S. To Capture of Anti-Castro Group

By ROBIN HERMAN

Over the last five months an anti-Castro group that the Federal Bureau of Investigation regards as the most dangerous terrorist organization in the United States has claimed responsibility for a series of bombings that have taken on global political implications.

The United States Government has placed "highest priority" on seizing members of the group, called Omega 7, but so far not one of its members has been arrested as a bomber.

The F.B.I. says that the organization probably has no more than seven members and that penetrating it has raised unusually difficult problems.

"I need proof, I need documents, I need phone calls," said Larry W. Wack, an agent who has worked on the case.

In a mimeographed sheet, Omega 7, which is based in Union City, N.J., declared:

Violence Against Violence

Violence Against Hypocrisy

Violence for Dignity and Liberty

The mimeographed sheet was given to a Spanish-language newspaper just three weeks after the group had claimed responsibility for a bomb that exploded at Kennedy International Airport in luggage about to be loaded on a Trans World Airlines flight carrying 155 passengers and crew members to Los Angeles.

In recent months, Omega 7 has taken responsibility for bombing the Soviet Mission to the United Nations once and the Cuban Mission twice and the Fifth Avenue offices of Aeroflot, the Soviet airline.

Eulalio José Negrín, a Cuban exile leader who had been organizing trips to Havana, was shot to death on Nov. 25 outside his office in Union City. Omega 7, calling him a "traitor," said it was responsible for the assassination.

'We shall continue our actions anywhere in the world as long as there are commercial enterprises and traitors that support our enemies, allowing them to obtain great quantities of dollars through commerce," the sheet said. "We shall continue to struggle in foreign lands until we reach the 'Omega' stage to complete plans of bringing the struggle to Cuban soil." Omega is the last letter in the Greek alphabet.

It has been nearly 19 years since the failure of the American-sponsored Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba, but a small group of right-wing Cuban émigrés clings to the belief that President Fidel Castro and his Communist Government can be overthrown. Until that stage arrives, the group's members say, they will fight the battle on American soil, attacking President Castro's spies and economic collaborators

'There is still a little flame here in the United States showing the people over there in Cuba we still think of them; we still think of combat," said Alvin Ross-Diaz, a veteran of the Bay of Pigs and a jailed member of the Cuban Nationalist Movement. The Federal Bureau of Investigation believes his group has provided the membership pool over the years for a myriad of anti-Castro terrorist groups, including Omega 7.

Global Implications

Following the bombing of the Soviet Mission last December, which shattered windows as high as 18 stories above the residential block on the East Side, Donald F. McHenry, the United States representative at the United Nations, said after consultation with the F.B.I. that apprehending Omega 7 members had been given "the highest priority."

That month he appointed a new deputy H. Carl McCall, charged with America's responsibilities as host country in protecting other missions. At a time when the United States is asking increased protection for its own embassies abroad, the Omega 7 bombings suddenly have global political implications.

The F.B.I. has been able to make only a few minor arrests connected to the group in the metropolitan region. Agents say it not only is extremely difficult to pene-trate, but placing informants on the witness stand also puts them in grave dan-ger and destroys their future usefulness. They say that hard proof is needed while bomb explosions consume nearly all evidence, and that the victims have been uncooperative.

Members Called 'Hoodlums'

Although Omega 7 views itself as a patriotic organization, the F.B.I. says its members are hoodlums.

'They are hoods who use 'Castro out of Cuba' as an excuse for their criminal activities," said Tom Locke, a member of the F.B.I.'s New York antiterrorist unit. "They were never in Cuba. They can extort money, go about their daily routine, and be big shots in their community by virtue of violence.

Rudy Garcia, the executive editor of El Diario-La Prensa, the Spanish language newspaper, called Omega 7 members "pipsqueak commandos" in a vitriolic editorial in January and asked the intimidated Cuban-American community to help the F.B.I. in exposing them. Omega 7 had bombed the newspaper office, which is situated in Manhattan at 181 Hudson Street, in October 1978. And just before the editorial appeared, the lives of Mr. Garcia and a reporter were threatened. "To turn our streets into battlegrounds, to endanger the life of innocent citizens, to attempt to shut the voice of the press through threats and bombs is at the very least ungrateful," Mr. Garcia said, "and at the most a travesty of their alleged reasons for being here - to secure the benefits of freedom and democracy. It is surely a poor way for a guest to treat a host.

A woman examined damage to Cuban U.N. Mission last October after bombing for which Omega 7 group claimed credit met with the Castro Government and helped arrange the release of hundreds of prisoners and the visits of 100,000 exiles to their homeland in 1979.

Then President Castro, surrounded by police officers and his own guards, visited New York City last October without incident. "They really lost face in the community when Castro was here and they weren't able to do anything," Mr. Locke said. " 'There was the one person responsible for all the problems they've been yelling about, and they had him here, and they did nothing."

A Glimpse of Operation

The F.B.I.'s investigation of the 1976 assassination of Orlando Letelier, the former Chilean Ambassador, in Washington, provided a glimpse at the operation the anti-Castro terrorists.

Two Union City members of the Cuban Nationalist Movement were convicted of conspiracy. Guillermo Novo Sampol, 40, then head of the northern zone of the Cuban Nationalist Movement, and Mr. Ross, 47, were sentenced to life imprisonment. Mr. Novo's 41-year-old brother, Ignatio, was found guilty of perjury.

Two movement members charged in the case, José Dionisio Suárez y Esquivel, 41, and Virgilio Pablo Paz y Romero, 28, are still fugitives and are also being sought by the F.B.I. for questioning in the T.W.A. bombing.

Michael Vernon Townley, an American-born agent of the Chilean secret service who admitted organizing the Letelier assassination and placing the bomb, was the prosecution's chief witness.

The Novo brothers staged somewhat amateurish anti-Castro protests in the mid-1960's. In 1964 they were appre-hended on an island in the East River firing a bazooka at the United Nations, where Ché Guevera was speaking. The shell apparently fell harmlessly into the water. The brothers were subsequently released, however, because the police had failed to read them their rights.

Exiled Cubans Recruited

In 1974 Armando Santana was arrested on charges of placing a crude bomb outside the Academy of Music on 14th Street in Manhattan where there was to be a concert sponsored by a pro-Castro organization. He was paroled two years later and now, at 30, is the local leader of the Cuban Nationalist Movement. When Mr. Townley, acting on orders from the military Chilean Government of Gen. Augusto Pinochet, needed help in anti-leftist espionage work, law-enforcement officials said, he was referred to the Cuban Nationalist Movement branch in Union City. There he recruited the exiled Cubans who were eager for the support of an anti-Communist government. After using the Cubans in other espionage activities, Mr. Townley met with them again in 1976 and planned the assassination of Mr. Letelier, who had been jailed by the dictatorship when Salvador Allende, the Marxist president, was overthrown in 1973. As an exile, Mr. Letelier had remained a harsh critic of the regime and was running a left-wing research organization in Washington, the Institute for Policy Studies. According to testimony during the trial the members of the Cuban Nationalist Movement were eager to gain international prestige and agreed to help kill Mr. Letelier without a payoff. Mr. Townley testified that he placed the remote-control bomb under Mr. Letelier's car and that the Cubans helped make the device and detonate it. The explosion killed both Mr. Letelier and Ronni Moffitt, an assistant at the institute.

another. "You can throw all these groups in the air and one comes down and that's the C.N.M.," said Mr. Wack, the F.B.I. agent, who was commended for helping trace the involvement of local members of the Cuban Nationalist Movement to the etelier assassination.

Mr. Ross, convicted of conspiracy in the assassination and now serving two consecutive life sentences, said he had nothing to do with the plot. Of the connection between the Cuban Nationalist Movement and Omega 7, he said, "If I were; Omega 7 I would have the guts to say, 'Yes, we are.' I'm serving life. Let the in 20 years from a humanitarian point of heat come to the Cuban Nationalist Move- view? Look at the numbers — 100.000 ment because we know we are clear.

A gracious, neatly groomed man with shiny black hair and gray sideburns, Mr. Ross spoke fervently about his personal history and political beliefs from the Hudson County Jail in Jersey City, where he was transferred recently to answer a separate weapons charge.

The Aim Is Overthrow

"I was young, very romantic," he said. "I fought for Castro in Cuba. Then some experience made me reach the conclusion he was no good. My brother spent 14 years in jail there.

"Our aim is to overthrow Castro by any means, including violence. We have a board of advisers that we keep secret doctors, engineers, economists, philosophers, professors from university, and hese are the people who give us ideas.

"They think it's a bunch of kids in Union City doing this," he added indignantly.

"These 75 Cubans were picked by Castro," Mr. Ross went on, referring to participants in the dialogue. "These people went to Cuba and said it was about time to be friends, and at the same time these people are the informers to the F.B.I. about our movement.

"I don't approve of bombings, but I sympathize deep in my heart. It's hard to get the attention of the American peo-ple."

He maintained that the Cuban community also had sympathized with bombing such buildings as the Russian and issions et he (ubans alone. and they will say 'Let the Russians blow. They should have blown the whole build-"he said. ing,

Mr. Ross derided the late Mr. Negrín and others arranging trips to Havana to reunite Cuban families. He said they were taking advantage of the people, charging exorbitant travel rates and putting American cash into Mr. Castro's pocket. He also criticized El Diario for supporting the dialogue.

Our newspaper is uncompromisingly anti-Castro," countered Mr. Garcia, the executive editor, "but we saw no reason to oppose the reunifications of family. How can you oppose someone wanting to see a mother or father they haven't seen view? Look at the numbers — 100,000 have gone back. I'm sure virtually all of them are anti-Castro, but there are family ties that call them. That these few jokers set themselves up as arbiters of family ties and family love is absurd. Who elected them?

"It's not that I'm a hero. I'm a fat, aging 46-year-old executive editor with a wife and a couple kids. But by God, I'm enough of an American down in my guts that I get monumentally angry when the principles I've dedicated my life to are defiled by jokers like this.

"People say I'm either being foolish or brave. I can't take the time to look for a bomb. I don't know what one looks like. When I go out of the building with other people, though, I go out first. It's my responsibility. I take the brunt of what happens for something I might have done," Mr. Garcia said.

Prospects for Capture

What are the prospects of catching the Omega 7 bombers? The F.B.I. says it is much closer," and the F.B.I.'s New Jersey unit has been directed to put together a racketeering case against the suspected terrorists. Catching them in their extortion of Cuban businessmen might prove easier than placing them at a bombing, officials believe.

Rudy Garcia believes people may take the law into their own hands. "Eleven kids passed by the Cuban mission 20 seconds before a bombing," he said. "If a couple of those kids died, you'd see a wave of revulsion among the American people with no time to disti after a February 1975 bombing, the group has taken responsibility for 20 bombings in the New York area. But the F.B.I. called the T.W.A. bombing last March 25 'a marked departure'' from its previous activity because it showed the group was willing to injure innocent people.

"The place to get rid of Castro is Cuba, not Manhattan's East Side." Since Omega 7 first proclaimed itself

The F.B.I. attributes the escalation of violence to a recent erosion of the group's influence, a dip in its finances and an inability to recruit young members. The opposition by the right-wing element to any dealings whatsoever with the Castro Government was weakened by the establishment of what has been called "the dialogue." In the fall of 1978 a group of moderate Cubans known as the Committee of 75 (actually, they numbered 140, including priests, academicians, youths and even Bay of Pigs veterans)

At the trial in Washington, an Omega 7 sticker appeared on one wall of the courthouse and the insignia was scrawled on tween the good and bad guys. Is that what they're looking for, for the Cuban community?"
