

THE DIFFERENCE.—From the 'Greensboro' (Ala.) Beacon we clip the following tribute to a faithful slave. When did our readers ever read or hear any such notice of a Yankee help, an English hob-nail, or a French peasant?

DEATH OF A MOST FAITHFUL SERVANT.—Levi, "the Saddler," well known by most persons in this vicinity, died on the 19th inst., of dropsy. He belonged to the estate of the late Colonel James D. Webb, and was looked upon by all who knew him as a man of excellent principles. His master, was, we know, greatly attached to him, and had the fullest confidence in his integrity. A more highly respected servant, or one of more sterling worth, we have never known.
