

ARRIVAL OF THE CYANE WITH FIFTY-THREE WALKER FILLIBUSTERS.

From The Boston Journal of July 30.

The United States sloop-of-war Cyane, Commander Robert G. Robb, arrived at this port, yesterday, from Aspinwall, after a passage of 24 days, bringing 53 men who were formerly attached to Walker's army.

The following are the names of the men belonging to Walker's army who arrived in the Cyane:

These men are principally quite young, and for the most part belong in the southern and western States. Ryan is a Boston boy, and C. F. Brown from East Granville, Mass. They are the only New-England men on board, as far as ascertained. Among these men are several of Walker's officers, among whom are Major Delaney and Lieutenants Simpson and Snyder. Four of the Fifty-three men are said to be deserters, and are regarded with very ill-favor by the faithful forty-nine who remained with Walker to the last.

They are generally in a very destitute condition, although some of the officers do not appear to be entirely out of money. They were very destitute of clothing when they came on board, but have been generously supplied in this particular. Their most pressing need at this time is that of boots or shoes.

Several of the men return deprived of limbs, and others with bullet wounds. One bright, intelligent ad showed our reporter the wound of a bullet which struck him in the shoulder, and communicated with freedom and intelligence with reference to Walker. The prevailing feeling toward the "gray-eyed man" seemed to be that of respect rather than resentment. They do not entertain an exalted opinion of his abilities as a military commander, but say he used his men well as long as he could. Much curiosity was expressed by them to know what Walker has been about since his arrival in the United States, and whether he is getting up another expedition or not.

Besides the 240 fillibusters on the Roanoke, the Saratoga had also arrived from Greytown with a large number of deserters. At Punta Arenas were several hundred more deserters.

Among those who left Aspinwall for Greytown was Wm. Begley, who died on the way. A short time after his death it was ascertained that, had he lived, he would have been heir to several hundred thousand dollars.

Several of the "remnants of Walker's Army," otherwise termed "Fillibusters," not having "a single red cent" in their pockets had recourse last evening to some of the Police-Stations for lodgings, and some of the number were actually well pleased with the accommodations afforded them. All of the number we have seen, express much anxiety to reach their homes, but, unfortunately, not one of the whole number (officers excepted), has the means to pay for one single mile of travel or conveyance from this city.
